PBDEs & other chemical fire retardants in Kids mattresses. . .

We are not organic fanatics or conspiracy theorist, but new laws have raised our concern. As of July 2007 a new Federal law (16 CFR Part 1633) that mandates all mattresses pass an 'open-flame' test has surged the use of chemical fire retardants. Across the world, scientists are studying Polybrominated Diphenyl Ethers (PBDEs), the family of chemicals that act as flame retardants. The results of their studies are of great concern. They are finding extremely high levels of these neurotoxic, and potentially carcinogenic, chemicals in the bodies of humans and wildlife. These chemicals are found in breast milk and breast tissue and have been linked to breast cancer and some say may impair the brain function and motor skills of children. All PBDEs disrupt thyroid hormone balance which is critical to proper brain development both in the womb and after birth. However, all we know for certain is these chemicals are very questionable.

The Design Sleep response has been to expand our line of kids mattresses by developing chemically free mattresses costing significantly less than the "Organic" online mattress sellers. The Healthy Kids Collection:
